Tiger Woods on comeback progress: 'I've never felt like this before, but this is the new norm'

Coming off a missed cut at last week's Genesis Open, Tiger Woods knows he still has some adjustments to make.

"I wasn't very good on Friday, and more importantly I didn't putt very good," Woods said at his Honda Classic pre-tournament press conference Wednesday. "I got exposed there on the back nine, three three-putts, and so I've worked a little bit on my puttings since I've been home each and every day."

Dressed in a white-and-grey shirt with matching white hat, Woods took to the microphone after completing his early morning pro-am round (6:45 a.m. tee time) and talked about readjusting to competitive play.

"I'm starting to get that feeling again of playing tournament golf, where each and every shot counts," he said. "Y'know, I'm looking at where I need to put the golf ball, I'm looking at forcasts -- before, you're at home and y'know who cares where the wind's coming from, who cares what the forecast is the next couple days, but tournament golf, I'm starting to get into that flow a little bit. I've missed it and it's becoming familiar again."

Happy Golfing.

GOLF TIPS

10 Best Swing Tips Ever!

Chipping Although it's tempting to hit chips indoors, all it takes is one broken lamp to realize that golf is an outdoor activity. Nevertheless, you can improve your chipping technique within the friendly confines of your own living room with the help of a wooden dowel or broken golf shaft. Take the dowel and place it through the hole on the top of the grip on a pitching wedge. Push the dowel roughly eight to 12 inches down the butt end of the shaft (a little Vaseline may help the dowel slide easier through the club shaft). Two to three feet of the dowel should extend outward from the top of the grip.

Now, practice your chipping motion, making sure that your left wrist remains rigid as the clubface passes through the impact zone. If your left wrist breaks down (a flaw that can cause a lot of short-game misery), you'll feel the protruding portion of the dowel hit against your left side. In addition to guarding against wrist breakdown, the dowel will also help you to establish the proper hands-forward position at address—a crucial factor for clean contact.

The dowel also will force you to keep your hands moving forward and swing the club down the target line in the follow-through. Once you master this drill, you'll be able to get up and down with the best of them.

As you perform these drills, you'll begin to see the value of other everyday items in helping you improve your game. Don't be afraid to experiment—you may just develop the next must-have training aid.

Stay In Your K Even good golfers with sound, grooved swings come untracked now and then, especially if they lose the flex in the back leg trying for distance. If you stiffen your back leg during the backswing, your body will likely tilt out of balance, making it tough to re-flex the knee just the right amount in time for impact. If you can play some great golf, but consistency is your problem, it might be that you need a dose of Special K. Here's how it works.

Happy Golfing one and all.....
